Title: Experimental Spells

In this book I shall explain a couple
experimental spells I have been working on,
Shatter Faith and
Summon Shadow
Elemntal. Both spells
have equal usefulness
and if I am correct,
can be a great boon to the Society.

The first, Shatter Faith, is designed to make lightbringers
nothing more than mindless slaves. My test subject performed
beyond my expectations, thereby
making this spell an absolute possibility.
Let me explain.
When the words
"An Lor Quas" are spoken along with the appropriate gestures,
the target becomes
quite insane. He hears voices which tell
him/her the follies of Lord British and his Virtues, suffers from intense nausea, becomes severely weak, and
also deforms
him to the point where his humanity is unrecognisable. After this has taken its course and the
madness leaves them,
they become nothing
more than mindless
slaves. This spell,
however, does not affect those with evil auras, as I have tried

this on Tyrael and he is unaffected. The reagents used in this spell are hard to come by, but worth it. What I am talking about is thus: the head of a lich, the brain of an orc lord, a holy weapon, and the blood and scale of a silver serpent. While these may seem like easy tasks for a group, I would not recommend going at this alone. The second spell also drives the subject into my most favorite form of entertainment, madness. The summoning of a shadow elemental has been unheard of until now. Shadow elementals were only found in Khaldun, but with the use of the words "Kal Nox Hur Xen" one can be summoned and possess a single target. The reagents are surprisingly easy to obtain if one knows where to find them. Simply a serpent's scale, a piece of shadow ore from the city of the dead, and blackrock dust. However, the ritual done to ensure that the elemental possesses the target and not yourself is quite lengthy. It requires a place of pure evil, the ashes of wood from a "binding tree" and a "giving tree", a nearby flow of lava and water, and the person casting the spell must be of the purest darkness. Now the actual ritual is simple, you must first cleanse the host with

fire, then water,
afterwards weaken the
host's body by
whatever means you
wish. You must burn
the wood from the
spread them on the
do the same with the
wood from the "binding
tree", and spread them
over the ashes from
the "giving tree",
symbolic of the dark
overtaking the light.
After this you must
summon the shadow
elemental, and it shall
possess the host,
making him/her
rather insane and as
weak as a child.

*a note is tucked into the page* I hope
these are beneficial,
Lord Artisem. I believe I may be able to use a power crystal
to amplify the
"Shatter Faith" spell
to use on all of Skara Brae at once.
